

Jane Garapick

The 3 Biggest WARNING SIGNS He'll NEVER Commit

Getting to TRUE LOVE
{finding your YOU that leads to TWO}

www.gettingtotruelove.com

Commitment

We've all been there.

You meet a great guy. He seems like he's got everything you could possibly ask for in a guy.

You have so much in common and the two of you can just talk on the phone for hours.

When you're with him, everything just seems so easy, so free. He lavishes attention on you, texts you sweet messages, sends you flowers, and does everything you ever thought your dream guy would do.

You're starting to think he may be The One. Mr. Right.

Then comes date three. You're thinking you'd really like to take things further, but there's this nagging question in the back of your mind that has you frozen with fear:

Is he for real?

Getting to True Love, LLC
336 36th Street, Suite 747
Bellingham, WA 98225, USA
www.gettingtotruelove.com

It's the question just about all of us have asked ourselves at one time or another (or, for some of us, every time) when we're in the midst of a whirlwind romance.

Is this the real thing, or is it going to fizzle out as quickly as it started as soon as it starts getting serious?

It's a very valid question since the unfortunate truth is that it happens all too often.

Although it's not possible to tell this early in a relationship whether or not your fireworks show will eventually lead to marriage, there are some clear signs you can watch out for that can tell you whether or not he's got it in him to go the distance.

While each of these individually do not necessarily mean that there's no way he'll ever go for the little pink house with the picket fence, if he's showing all of them, then it's likely that a heart will be broken down the road (and I don't mean his).

Read on for the 3 clear warning signs that he's afraid of commitment.

Love,

He's never had a serious relationship.

Unless you're in your early twenties, if you're his first, you probably won't be his last.

Sure, he might have dated someone in the past for 6 months or so, but that's about the extent of it.

He'll most likely say that he's just never met anyone that he's really fallen for, but the truth is that he typically bails as soon as things start looking like a real relationship – you know, the kind where everything isn't perfectly perfect.

The kind that actually takes some work.

The kind that may even mean that he needs to change something about himself.

As soon as things change from fairy tale to reality, the commitment phobic man takes off.

He keeps things on the surface

If he's not open to sharing much about himself, he probably won't be open to sharing his life with you.

When you stop and really think about all of those long late night phone conversations, you realize that you didn't get into anything too deep.

Sure, he told you all about how he loves to travel and how he wants to see the world with you, but what about his relationship with his parents, his childhood, or any other deeply personal information?

Men that don't like commitment typically also don't like sharing intimate details.

If you've been dating for a while and you don't know much about where he grew up, what his values are, his hopes and dreams for the future, then it's a real warning sign that he's holding back.

He'll most likely hold back from making a true commitment also.

His parents didn't do it

If his parents split up, particularly when he was young, it's very likely he'll follow in their footsteps.

If you ever can get him talking about his childhood and his parents, take a special note of whether or not they had a lasting, committed relationship.

Whether we like it or not, all of us have been profoundly influenced by our parents, and much more than we even realize.

If he comes from a broken home or has a father that was not particularly commitment minded (read: his father bailed on him), then he's likely to follow in the same footsteps.

Will he ever commit?

While these 3 warning signs aren't guarantees that he'll never get around to putting a ring on your finger, (yes, people can overcome their programming if they choose to), know that it's likely to be an uphill battle.

For example, lots of children from divorced parents grow up and have happy, fully committed relationships, but unfortunately the statistics are against it.

The most important thing you can do for yourself is to keep an eye out for these warning signs.

If you see any or all of them, know that it's probably a good idea to put the brakes on and take things a bit slower.

As much as it's difficult to throw some water on those early roaring flames, a lifelong, happy, committed relationship beats a whirlwind flame out any day.

In the meantime, take a look at these additional resources about commitment:

Why You're Not Getting What You Want in a Relationship

Should I Keep Waiting for a Commitment, Or Move On?

I Left Him Because He Wouldn't Commit

For more great advice on bringing TRUE love into your life, visit my website:

www.GettingtoTRUELove.com

Show Facebook you "Like" us!

<http://www.facebook.com/GettingtoTRUELove>

Follow us on Twitter!

<http://twitter.com/JaneGarapick>

Questions?

And please take some time to ask me your specific questions and tell me your story of how you got to where you are now - whether it be a place of heartbreak, confusion, or relief. We're all in this together!

www.GettingtoTRUELove.com/contact-me/